But the Colonel still answered “Bosh!” and Philip did not hear the end of the matter, nor where the truth of it lay; for presently all the forms passed away, and he saw a little room, a little dingy room, and a gray-haired, slouching fellow in an old coat, smoking an old pipe and scribbling on foolscap, scribbling away far into the night, and then sitting and musing for a solitary half hour in front of his dying fire before he went to bed. There was something in this figure that made Philip curious, and he went nearer and looked. Hush! It was himself, and—

He awoke with a start. Dale was smiling down on him with his old friendly smile, and saying to Janet Delane:

“We shall never let this old chap leave us for long, shall we, Jan?”
