

A traditional Chinese ink and wash painting on a light brown background. The scene depicts a landscape with a large, gnarled tree on the right side. In the center, there are several large, vibrant peonies in shades of pink, purple, and white. To the left, a turkey with a red head and a patterned body stands on a rock. A smaller turkey is visible in the lower center. In the upper left, a white bird with long, curved wings is perched on a branch. The overall style is characteristic of traditional Chinese art, with fine lines and a focus on naturalistic detail.

Global Grey Ebooks

THE BOOK OF ODES

L. CRANMER-BYNG

THE BOOK OF ODES

L. CRANMER-BYNG

The Book of Odes by L. Cranmer-Byng.

First published in 1908.

This ebook edition was created and published by Global Grey on the 22nd November 2023.

The artwork used for the cover is 'Peony Double Ribbon Scroll'
painted by Yu Sheng.

This book can be found on the site here:

globalgreyebooks.com/book-of-odes-ebook.html

©Global Grey 2023

globalgreyebooks.com

Contents

Editorial Note

Introduction

The Deserted Wife

King's Messenger

Flight

The Tower Of Wǎn

Drifting

The Slanderers

Love And The Magistrate

City Of Chow

I. The Prayer Of The Emperor Ching

II. The Prayer Of The Emperor Ching

Maytime

Lady Of The Lagoon

Through Eastern Gates

The Straggler

The Happy Man

The Pear-Tree

Princely Visitors

The Nightlong Tryst

A Wife's Memories

The Princes

Blue Collar

A Friend Forgotten

The Ephemerae

Happy In Haou

Three Gifts

Brave Thoughts

On The Banks Of Ho

Sorrow

Bulwarks Of Empire

The Bride Cometh

Before The Ford

Good King Wu

Faint Heart

Without Her

The Forest Lover

The Householder's Lament

Unavailing

Grey Dawns And Red

Editorial Note

The object of the editors of this series is a very definite one. They desire above all things that, in their humble way, these books shall be the ambassadors of good-will and understanding between East and West, the old world of Thought, and the new of Action. In this endeavour, and in their own sphere, they are but followers of the highest example in the land. They are confident that a deeper knowledge of the great ideals and lofty philosophy of Oriental thought may help to a revival of that true spirit of Charity which neither despises nor fears the nations of another creed and colour. Finally, in thanking press and public for the very cordial reception given to the "Wisdom of the East" series, they wish to state that no pains have been spared to secure the best specialists for the treatment of the various subjects at hand.

L. CRANMER-BYNG

S. A. KAPADIAI

Northbrook Society,
185 Piccadilly, W.

Introduction

“While reading the works of Confucius, I have always fancied I could see the man as he was in life, and, when I went to Shantung, I actually beheld his carriage, his robes, and the material parts of his ceremonial usages. There were his descendants practising the old rites in their ancestral home; and I lingered on, unable to tear myself away. Many are the princes and prophets that the world has seen in its time; glorious in life, forgotten in death. But Confucius, though only a humble member of the cotton-clothed masses, remains among us after many generations. He is the model for such as would be wise. By all, from the Son of Heaven down to the meanest student, the supremacy of his principles is fully and freely admitted. He may, indeed, be pronounced the divinest of men.”<sup>1</sup>

This is the tribute of Ssü-Ma Ch'ien, the author of the first great History of China, who lived in the first century before Christ. Many centuries have gone since the old historian, out of the fulness of his heart, sang the praises of the Master and the supremacy of his principles. To-day, as a thousand years ago, the school children take their first serious instruction from the five books, or King as they are called in Chinese:—The Shu King, or Book of History; The I King, or Book of Changes; The Shi King, or Book of Poetry; The Li Chi, or Book of Rites; The Ch'un Ch'in, or Annals of Spring and Autumn.

The Shi King, or Book of Poetry, from which these poems are rendered through the prose translations of Professor Legge in his great series of Chinese classics, was compiled by Confucius about 500 B.C. from earlier collections which had been long existent, two of which, we know from an ode written about 780 B.C., were called Ya and Nan respectively. The oldest of these odes belong to the Shang dynasty, 1765-1122 B.C.; the latest to the time of King Ting, 605-585 B.C. The odes may be roughly divided into two classes:—(1) The Songs of the People; (2) The Official Odes. Professor Giles, in his “History of Chinese Literature” (Heinemann), divides the latter into three classes:—(a) Odes sung at ordinary entertainments given by the suzerain; (b) Odes sung on grand occasions when the feudal nobles were gathered together; (c) Panegyrics and sacrificial odes.

The great importance that Confucius placed upon the Book of Poetry may be gathered from the following anecdote:—One day his son Le was passing hurriedly through the Court, when he met his father standing alone lost in thought. Confucius, on seeing his son, addressed him thus—

“Have you read the Odes?”

He replied, “Not yet.”

“Then,” said Confucius, “if you do not learn the Odes, you will not be fit to converse with.”<sup>2</sup>

To understand this, we must know something of the character and teachings of Confucius. William Morris was to some extent the Confucius of his age. Both men dreamt of a golden past—a past brilliant with heroic deeds, mellowed with peace, and serene beneath the first clear dawn of ancient wisdom. Both drew inspiration from the unstained springs of poetry. Morris went back to the sagas of the North and the tales and tragedies of the early Greeks; Confucius to the odes and ballads of his own country. For Morris, “the idle singer of an empty day,” the world had grown old and careworn and unheroic. Confucius, too, was born out of his due time. The world—his world of petty princelings and court intriguers and oppression—was not ripe for the great gospel of humanity he had come to preach. Each failed lamentably in politics, and succeeded elsewhere; Confucius as the transmitter of the wisdom of the ages, the revealer of human goodness through conduct and knowledge; William Morris as the inspired prophet of beauty, the teacher of good taste to the hideous Victorian age in which he was born. When the dogmas and economics of his socialism are forgotten, this influence will remain.

<sup>1</sup> “Gems of Chinese Literature,” by Herbert Giles (Quaritch).

<sup>2</sup> “Confucianism and Taoism,” by Sir Robert Douglas (S.K.C.K.)

Lastly, and perhaps greatest parallel of all, both passionately loved the people. Confucius, when asked how the superior man attained his position, said: “He cultivates himself so as to bring rest unto the people.” Again he said: “To govern a country of a thousand chariots, there must be reverent attention to business, and faithfulness, economy in expenditure, and love for the people.” Both recognised, as all great men must, that there is more to be learnt from the natural man, the man who lives next to nature, and through his toil knows something of her ways and moods, than the artificial mime of ancient court or modern drawing-room. It was through the Odes that Confucius taught his own generation to understand the manners and customs and the simple feelings of the men of old. Here are no great poems written by highly cultivated men, but songs that came naturally from the hearts of all, concerning their little troubles, their hopes and fears, the business in which they were engaged. The farmer sings of his husbandry.

He gives us this picture of the workers over the land coming to clear the virgin soil of the grass and brushwood that cover it. “There they go in thousands, two and two, side by side, tearing the roots out of the soil; some to the marshlands, some where the dry paths wind through the meadows, and some by the river banks. There is the master inspecting all, with his sons ready at hand, followed by their households; there also are the neighbours who have come to help; there the hired servants. Now the feast has begun, sounds of revelry are heard; the husbands’ hearts are full of love as they sit with their wives by their side. Now, they begin again patiently to prepare the southern lands, breaking the soil with the ploughshare. Many kinds of grain they sow; soon strange life will arise from every ear, when the young blades raise their heads from the ground. See the young blades arise in long unbroken lines that day by day grow and spear before us. Fertile is the swelling seed, and through it go the labourers who weed it over and over again. A little while and the reapers have come; the golden grain is stacked high, the straw innumerable is multiplied. There is sufficient to make the spirits glad, to offer to the shades of our fathers, and yield whatever the rites require; sufficiency for the kings and nobles to give mighty banquets, when at the fragrant feast both host and guest sit down together; there is enough when the feast is over to satisfy the aged poor and cheer them with a never-ending abundance. Not now alone, but from all time and in all lands, the earth repays a thousand-fold to those who toil.”

Such is the song of husbandry three thousand years ago. What joyousness is here! What scenes of peace and simple festival of family love and delight in the land!

Again some officer in the days of good King Wǎn, galloping along a clear road on the king’s service, hammers out the splendid galloping song, called “King’s Messenger,” in the present book, to the beat of his galloping horses’ hoofs. No such poem was elaborated in garden or grove where the poets clustered, and drank, and sang. It comes straight from the heart of this nameless envoy of old, fiercely exulting in his own untiring energy and in the mettle of his splendid steeds. How many of these poems declare the joys of work bravely attempted—bravely done! These little sagas of blood and brain can teach us more of life than all the threadbare moralities which serve as poetry in the modern day. How modern they are! Yes, indeed! as long as colour is colour, and life is life. As long as youth with its sublime folly will wait all night for the tryst that is never kept, these poems, the earliest collection of secular songs we know, will remain fresh and charm us to the end. These old writers, viewing nature at first hand and not through the medium of any books, wrote faithfully of what they felt and saw.

“With what delight does the eye wander over the surrounding landscape! Very gently the river glides along through the plain, which it makes beautiful with the long canal formed by its waters. To the south rise great mountains in the shape of an amphitheatre, while, on the further bank, reeds and pines, covered with a never-fading verdure, invite the fresh breath of the cooling winds. Happy places! those who dwell in you live like brothers. Never is the voice of discord heard among you. What glory shall be yours! The prince, whose heritage you are, hath chosen you for his abode. Already is the plan of his palace formed; proud walls arise, and grand terraces are building on the east and west. Haste to come, great prince! O haste to come; sports and pleasure wait upon thy coming. The solid foundations, which are now being laid with redoubled strokes of the hammer, display thy wisdom. Neither rains nor storms shall ever prevail against them. Never shall the insect which creeps or walks penetrate thy habitation. The guard who watches is sometimes surprised, the swiftest dart may err, the frightened pigeon forgets the use of its wings, and the pheasant with difficulty flies before the eagle; but before thee every obstacle vanishes. With what majesty do these colonnades rear their fronts! How immense are those halls! Lofty columns support the ceiling, the brightness of the day illuminates them and penetrates them on all sides. It is here that my prince reposes; it is here that he sleeps, upon long mats woven with great art.”

Often the song is one that only a woman could have sung. Some lady of the harem of King Wǎn praises the queen, who is never jealous of the inferior wives, but cherishes them as some great tree cherishes the creepers that gather round it. Again, “the ripe plums are falling from the bough; only seven-tenths of them remain! If any desire to marry me, now has the fortunate time arrived!” In the second verse only three-tenths are left; in the third she had gathered them all into her basket: the lover has only to speak the word, and she will be his. Many of these odes are undoubtedly the work of women. The European idea that Chinese women are, and always have been, the closely prisoned slaves of their husbands, idle and soulless and ignorant, has been dispelled by Professor Giles in his interesting “Chinese Sketches” published by Kegan, Paul & Co. “In novels, for instance,” he writes, “the heroine is always highly educated—composes finished verses, and quotes from Confucius; and it is only fair to suppose that such characters are not purely and wholly ideal. Besides, most young Chinese girls whose parents are well off are taught to read...” According to Legge, there was more freedom of movement allowed to women in the days when the odes were written and collected, before the custom of cramping the feet was introduced; consequently their minds were more able to expand from contact with the outer world, and better fitted for literary tasks. The names of the ladies Pan-Chieh-Yu and Fang Wei-I are well known to every student of Chinese literature.

Perhaps the great importance of the odes, first grasped by Confucius, and afterwards by the whole of China, lies in the fact that they are no mere abstract creations of an imaginative brain. Each one of these nameless poets writes about himself or herself; their sorrows, their aspirations, their outlook on their own times, contented or gloomy, are all chronicled herein. In the official odes we see the feudal princes coming to town to greet their sovereign lord. The state-carriages with their four-horse teams have gone to greet them. What gifts has the king to bestow on those he delights to honour? Bring forth the dark-coloured robes embroidered with the dragon, and the silken skirts with the hatchet design upon them. See, they are coming, you may tell by the dragon flags that wave before them—coming, by the hwuy-hwuy sound of the bells that reaches us. By the bright red buskins that cover the knees we know them. These are the princes!

No great poetry to be sure! no monolith of inspired travail by a giant race that may stand alone in the time-deserted regions of sand and silence! These are just the natural songs that float upward from the happy valleys and down the sedge-strewn banks of the wandering K'e. Above all, they are naive and bright as on their birthday, with that most precious quality of truth and unconscious art which never lets them tarnish or fade. The king is very wicked! The poor groom of the Chamber to His Majesty gives vent to his sorrow in song. He lets you know all about it. The royal naughtiness stands clearly revealed, not by any calico-tearing epithets such as a modern poet affrights the ears of a Sultan with, but just a gentle bland admonishment, a little dirge of political desolation and the knell of a falling dynasty.

I have put, or tried to put, these poems back into poetry. Four of these pieces have been exquisitely rendered by my friend Mr. Allen Upward, and speak for themselves.<sup>3</sup> As regards my own reasons for rendering Chinese poetry into English verse, I am content to shelter myself behind the great authority and judgment of Sir John Davis, who, in his "Poetry of the Chinese," contends that "verse must be the shape into which Chinese, as well as other poetry, must be converted, in order to do it mere justice." I will, however, take the opportunity of saying, in conclusion, that the great literatures of the world have been too long in the hands of mere scholars, to whom the letter has been all-important and the spirit nothing. The time has come when the literary man should stand forth and claim his share in the revelation of truth and beauty from other lands and peoples whom our invincible European ignorance has taught us to despise.

L. Cranmer-Byng.

<sup>3</sup> Namely:—"The Prayer of Ching," p. 25; "Through Eastern Gates," p. 30; "The Pear-Tree," p. 34; "Blue Collar," p. 39.

The Deserted Wife

You came—a simple lad
 In dark blue cotton clad,
 To barter serge for silken wear;
 But not for silk you dallied there.
 Ah! was it not for me
 Who led you through the K'e,
 Who guided you
 To far Tun-K'ew?
 "It is not I who would put off the day;
 But you have none your cause to plead,"
 I said,—”O love, take heed,
 When the leaves fall do with me what you may.”

I saw the red leaves fall,
 And climbed the ruined wall,
 Towards the city of Fuh-kwan
 I did the dim horizon scan.
 "He cometh not," I said,
 And burning tears were shed:
 You came—I smiled,
 Love—reconciled,
 You said, "By taper reed and tortoise-shell,
 I have divined, and all, O love, is well."

"Then haste the car," I cried,
 "Gather my goods and take me to thy side."

Before the mulberry tree
 With leaves hath strewn the lea,
 How glossy-green are they! how rare!
 Ah! thou young thoughtless dove beware!
 Avoid the dark fruit rife
 With sorrow to thy life.
 And thou, whose fence
 Is innocence,
 Seek no sweet pleasuring with any youth!
 For when a man hath sinned, but little shame
 Is fastened to his name,
 Yet erring woman wears the garb of ruth.

When the lone mulberry tree
 With leaves bestrews the lea,
 They yellow slowly, slowly down
 From green to gold, from gold to brown.
 Three sombre years ago
 I fled with you, and lo,
 The floods of K'e
 Now silently

Creep to the curtains of my little car.
 Through cloud and gloom I was your constant
 star;
 Now you have gone from sight,
 And love's white star roams aimless through the night.

For three long years your wife,
 Toil was my part in life,
 Early from sleep I rose and went
 About my labour, calm, content;
 Nor any morn serene
 Lightened the dull routine.
 Early and late,
 I was your mate,
 Bearing the burdens that were yours to share.
 Fain of the little love that was my lot,
 Ah, kinsmen scorn me not!
 How should ye know when silence chills despair?

Old we should grow in accord,
 Old—and grief is my lord.
 Between her banks the K'e doth steer,
 And pine-woods ring the lonely mere.
 In pleasant times I bound
 My dark hair to the sound
 Of whispered vows
 'Neath lilac boughs,
 And little recked o'er broken faith to weep.
 Now the grey shadows o'er the marshland creep:
 The willows stir and fret:
 Low in the west the dull dun sun hath set.

King's Messenger

Galloping, galloping, gallant steed;
Six reins slackened and dull with sweat,
Galloping, galloping still we speed,
Seeking, counselling, onward set.

Galloping, galloping, piebald steed;
Six reins, silken reins, start and strain,
Galloping, galloping, still we speed,
News—what news—from the King's domain.

Galloping, galloping, white and black;
Six reins glossy and flaked with foam,
Galloping, galloping, look not back!
On for the King—for the King we roam.

Galloping, galloping, dappled grey;
Six reins true to the hand alone,
Galloping, galloping, night and day,
Seeking, questioning, galloping, gone!

Flight

Cold and keen the north wind blows,
Silent falls the shroud of snows.
You who gave me your heart
Let us join hands and depart!
Is this a time for delay?
Now, while we may,
Let us away.

Wailingly the north wind goes,
Wailing through a whirl of snows.
You who gave me your heart
Let us join hands and depart!
Is this a time for delay?
Now, while we may,
Let us away.

Only the lonely fox is red,
Black but the crow-flight overhead.
You who gave me your heart,
The chariot creaks to depart,
Is this a time for delay?
Now, while we may,
Let us away.

The Tower Of Wǎn

Wǎn drew a tower of bold ascent,
 A tower of lofty size.
 In crowds the zealous builders went,
 The walls began to rise.
 "Haste not," said he, when first the work began;
 But all the people were as sons of Wǎn.

The King was in the wondrous park,
 The does so sleek and brown
 Lay couched in fern; from dawn to dark
 White birds came glistening down;
 The King was by the pond whose waters hold
 A thousand carp with ruddy scales of gold.

Upon his posts the fretted board
 Is hung with drums and bells;
 What music chimes from their accord,
 What sound of laughter swells
 From the pavilion of the circling pool
 Where joy and Wǎn, the brother monarchs, rule

What harmony of bells and drums!
 What call of drums and bells!
 Beyond the flaming water comes
 What sound of happy spells.
 The blind musicians blind us with delight;
 While the deep lizard drums roll on till night.

Drifting

Two youths into their boats descend,
Whose shadows on the waters sway;
Ah! light hearts bravely sped away,
My heavy heart forbodes the end.

Two youths into their boats descend,
Two lives go drifting far from me;
Between the willow glooms I see
Death lurking at the river's bend.

The Slanderers

The blue flies buzz upon the wing,
From fence to fence they wander;
O happy King! O courteous King!
Give heed to no man's slander.

The noisy blue flies rumble round,
Upon the gum-trees lighting;
A tongue of evil hath no bound,
And sets the realm a-fighting.

The clumsy blue flies buzzing round
Upon the hazels blunder;
O cursèd tongue that knows no bound,
And sets us two asunder.

Love And The Magistrate

When the great carriage rumbles by,
I see him in his robes of state,
Calm, pitiless, sedate.
Man of the cold far-piercing eye,
O but I long for you,
Right for you, wrong for you,
Naught could keep us apart,
But the cold eye reading my heart.

When the great carriage rumbles on,
In robes of state carnation red
I see the man of dread,
Bright gleaming robes and glance of stone,
O then I long for you,
Right for you, wrong for you,
Naught could keep us apart
But the cold eye reading my heart.

Together we may never bide,
Nor you and me one roof contain,
But death shall not divide;
The same close grave shall wed the twain.
Say! am I cold to you?
Nay! I will hold to you,
By the bright sun I swear,
O my life, my love, my despair.

City Of Chow

Cold from the spring the waters pass
Over the waving pampas grass.
All night long in dream I lie,
Ah me! ah me! to awake and sigh—
Sigh for the City of Chow.

Cold from the spring the rising flood
Covers the tangled southernwood.
All night long in dream I lie,
Ah me! ah me! to awake and sigh—
Sigh for the City of Chow.

Cold from its source the stream meanders,
Darkly down through the oleanders.
All night long in dream I lie,
Ah me! ah me! to awake and sigh—
Sigh for the City of Chow.

I. The Prayer Of The Emperor Ching

Let me be reverent, be reverent,
Even as the way of Heaven is evident,
And its appointment easy is to mar.

Let me not say, "It is too high above,"
Above us and below us doth it move,
And daily watches wheresoe'er we are.

It is but as a little child I ask,
Without intelligence to do my task,
Yet learning, month by month, and day by day.

I will hold fast some gleams of knowledge bright.
Help me to bear my heavy burden right,
And show me how to walk in wisdom's way.

II. The Prayer Of The Emperor Ching

Even as a little helpless child am I,
 On whom hath fallen the perplexed affairs
 Of this unsettled state. High loneliness
 And sorrow are my portion. Thou great Father,
 Thou kingly pattern of parental awe,
 Whose mind for ever in the courts beheld,
 Roaming, the royal image of thy sire,
 Night long and day long, I—the little child—
 Will so be reverent.

O ye great kings!
 Your crowned successor crowns you in his heart.
 Live unforgotten. Here, upon the verge
 Of the momentous years, I pause and trace
 The shining footsteps of my forefathers,
 And the far-distant goal that drew them on—
 Too distant for my range. Howe'er resolved
 I may go forward, lo! a thousand tracks
 Cause me to swerve aside. A little child—
 Only a little child—I am too frail
 To cope with the anxieties of state
 And cares of king-craft. Yet I will ascend

Into my Father's room, and through the courts
 Below, for ever seeking, I will pass,
 To brush the skirts of inspiration
 And touch the sleeves of memory.

O great
 And gracious Father, hear and condescend
 To guard, to cherish, to enlighten me.

Maytime

Deep in the grass there lies a dead gazelle,
The tall white grass enwraps her where she fell.
With sweet thoughts natural to spring,
A pretty girl goes wandering
With lover that would lead astray.

The little dwarf oaks hide a leafy dell,
Far in the wilds there lies a dead gazelle;
The tall white grass enwraps her where she fell,
And beauty, like a gem, doth fling
Bright radiance through the blinds of spring.
"Ah, gently! do not disarray
My kerchief! gently, pray!
Nor make the watch-dog bark
Under my lattice dark."

Lady Of The Lagoon

By the shores of that lagoon,
Where the water-lily lies,
Where the tall valerians rise
Slender as the crescent moon,
Goes Hëa Nan...Ah, Hëa Nan,
Sleep brings me no relief:
My heart is full of grief.

By the shores of that lagoon,
Where the drowsy lotus lies,
Where the tall valerians rise
Brighter than the orbèd moon,
Shines Hëa Nan...Ah, Hëa Nan,
I turn and turn all night,
And dawn brings no respite.

Through Eastern Gates

Through eastern gates I wandered far,
Where cloud-like beauties thronged the way;
Although like clouds their faces are,
My thoughts among them would not stay.
She in rough silk and kerchief blue
Gave me the only joy I knew.

I wandered by the curtain tower,
Like flowering rushes were the maids;
Although they match the rushes' flower,
Soon from my mind their beauty fades.
In humble silk and madder dye,
She fills my heart with ecstasy.

The Straggler

There is that little oriole
At rest where the mound doth rise;
Oh, but the way is long,
Long that before me lies.
There is no rest for me,
None for my tired feet;
Give me to drink and eat,
Do what is best for me.
Order an ambulance car,
And carry me, carry me on.

There is that little oriole
At rest where the mound doth bend;
Oh, but I know no fear
Save if the march will end.
There is no rest for me,
None for my tired feet;
Give me to drink and eat,
Do what is best for me.
Order an ambulance car,
And carry me, carry me on.

There is that little oriole
At rest on the hillock grey;
Oh, but I know no fear
Save that I fall by the way.

There is no rest for me,
None for my tired feet;
Give me to drink and eat,
Do what is best for me.
Order an ambulance car,
And carry me, carry me on.

The Happy Man

He has perched in the valley with pines over-grown,
This fellow so stout and so merry and free;
He sleeps and he talks and he wanders alone,
And none are so true to their pleasures as he.

He has builded his hut in the bend of the mound,
This fellow so fine with his satisfied air;
He wakes and he sings with no neighbour around,
And whatever betide him his home will be there.

He dwells on a height amid cloudland and rain,
This fellow so grand whom the world blunders by;
He slumbers alone, wakes, and slumbers again,
And his secrets are safe in that valley of Wei.

The Pear-Tree

This shade-bestowing pear-tree, thou
Hurt not, nor lay its leafage low;
Beneath it slept the Duke of Shaou.

This shade-bestowing pear-tree, thou
Hurt not, nor break one leafy bough;
Beneath it stayed the Duke of Shaou.

This shade-bestowing pear-tree, thou
Hurt not, nor bend one leafy bough;
Beneath it paused the Duke of Shaou.

Princely Visitors

White birds went over the West—
Young egrets, over the marshlands flying,
My Lords came visiting, ermine-dressed,
With the birds in their elegant beauty vieing.

In their States they have high renown,
Of the city of Chow they are never tiring,
And the rivers of night wind darkly down
Past the towers of their fame still aspiring.

The Nightlong Tryst

Down by the eastern gate
The willow wood's astir;
From dusk to dawn I wait
Through the soundless hours for her,
Till the morning star is shining.

Down by the eastern gate
The willow-thicket pales;
From dusk to dawn I wait,
Till the last red lantern fails,
And the morning star is shining.

A Wife's Memories

With taper rod of tall bamboo
You angle in the K'e,
Do I not go by dream to you
Who cannot come to me?

To left the Ts'euen waters roam,
The K'e flows on to right,
Ah! never gleams the newer home
Like that lost home to sight.

Leftward the Ts'euen stream beguiles,
And rightward calls the K'e,
Return, O light of happy smiles
And girdle-gems, to me!

The oars of cedar rise and fall
From boats of yellow pine,
Would I might roam the banks where all
The ghosts of girlhood shine!

The Princes

They gather the beans, gather the beans,
In their baskets square and round:
The princes all are coming to court,
And where shall their gifts be found?
The coaches of state and their teams go by,
What more for my lords have I?
Dark coloured robes with a dragon fine,
And silken skirts with the hatchet sign.

Clear bubbles the spring, bubbles the spring,
Around they gather the cress:
The princes all are coming to court,
Their banners the winds caress.
The dragon flag in the breezes swells,
To the hwuy-hwuy sound of the bells.
With two outside, the teams go past,
These are the princes come at last.

Red covers the knee, covers the knee:
Their buskins are red below.
Lofty bearing and stately mien,
Yonder my princes go.
In such the Son of Heaven delights,
The king shall renew their rights.
May the pleasure and power for my lords increase,
May the land yield corn and the years bring peace.

Blue Collar

O You with the collar of blue,
My heart is longing for you.
Though to call you I am not free,
Wherefore not send to me?

O you with the girdle of blue,
Long, long do I think of you.
Though to seek you I am not free,
Wherefore not come to me?

Ah, random and pleasure-drawn,
To the View Tower you are gone;
And a day without your sight
Is like three months in its flight.

A Friend Forgotten

The winds blow soft from the East,
But the storm welters by.
In the day of disaster and fear,
It was all you and I.
In the hour of your pride
You have cast me aside.

The bland winds blown from the East
Tornadoes pursue.
In the hour of disaster and fear
More than brother were you.
In the hour of delight
I am cast from your sight.

The winds come fair from the East
On the hills overhead
There is never a blade that is green,
Not a leaf but is dead.
My worth you forget,
But my faults linger yet.

The Ephemerae

In black and yellow are clad
The wings of the ephemerae;
But my heart is sad, is sad,
Because they will not stay with me.

Many colours adorn
The robes of the ephemerae;
But my heart's forlorn, forlorn,
Because they will not rest with me.

In robes of hempen snow
Rise the ephemerae;
But my heart is full of woe
Because they will not bide with me.

Happy In Haou

Fishes are there, by the score, I trow,
Their large heads sleepily showing;
The King is here, in the city of Haou,
At ease while the wine-cup's flowing.

Fishes are there in the weeds enow,
Their long tails lazily swaying;
The King is here, in the city of Haou,
Drinking, dreaming, delaying.

The fish lie under the willow bough
That leans and shadows the rushes;
The King is here, in the city of Haou,
At peace, and the wine-cup blushes.

Three Gifts

A royal gourd was given me,
And in exchange an emerald I gave,
No mere return for courtesy,
But that our friendship might outlast the grave.

A princely peach was given me,
And in exchange a ruby gem I gave,
No mere exchange for courtesy,
But that our friendship might outlast the grave.

A yellow plum was given me,
And in exchange a sardonyx I gave,
No mere return for courtesy,
But that our friendship might outlast the grave.

Brave Thoughts

Green is the upper robe,
Green with a yellow lining;
My sorrow none may probe,
Nor can I cease repining.

Green is the upper robe,
The lower garb is yellow;
My sorrow none may probe,
Nor any season mellow.

The silk was of emerald dye,
Ah! this was all your doing;
But I dream of an age gone by
To keep my heart from rueing.

Fine linen or coarse, 'tis cold,
But all I have to dress me;
So I think of the men of old,
And find brave thoughts possess me.

On The Banks Of Ho

The little boat of cypress rocks,
Rocks in the midst of Ho;
He was my lord, whose long dark locks
Divided in their downward flow.
Till death betide,
His bride,
I'll wed no other.
O Heaven! O mother!
Will you not understand your child?

The little boat of cypress rocks
There by the side of Ho;
He was my only one, whose locks
Divided in their downward flow.
Till death betide,
His bride,
I'll wed no other.
O Heaven! O mother!
Far from me be the thing defiled!
Will you not understand your child?

Sorrow

She sought her native land again.
The swallow takes its ragged flight.
We went together day and night,
Till parting drew her from my sight
And the tears fell down like rain.

She went her native land to seek.
Now up, now down the swallow flies.
And oh!—the last of tender ties,
The form that fades from aching eyes
And the tears coursing down my cheek.

Around, about the swallows dar
She fared into a far countree,
And when I vainly sought to see
The empty landscape mocked at me,
And great grief settled on my heart.

Bulwarks Of Empire

Good men are bulwarks; while the multitudes
Are walls that ring the land; great states are screens;
Each family a buttress; the pursuit
Of righteousness secures repose; like towers
Of strong defence the royal kinsmen stand
Immune from peril. May they still remain
Nor leave the king, a lonely citadel
Abandoned to his enemies.

Give heed
Unto the wrath of Heaven! nor presume
To idle; but revere the Heavenly moods,
Ephemeral though they seem. Be not of those
That roam at random. Heaven understands
And doth companion all the ways we go,
And seeth all things clearly...

The Bride Cometh

The turtle-dove dwells in the magpie's nest.

One cometh as a bride to be caressed;
A hundred carriages have gone in quest.

The magpie's home the young dove hath possessed.

This lady cometh as a life-long guest;
A hundred chariots on the road have pressed.

The turtle-dove shall fill the magpie's nest.

She travels far from home to love and rest;
A hundred carriages her rank attest.

Before The Ford

If your heart be kind and true,
I will ford the stream with you.
If your fickle thoughts go straying,
Come with me no more a-maying.
Oh, you silly, silly swain!
Better men than you remain.

If you love me, dear my lord,
Bid me and I'll cross the ford.
Should your roving thoughts forsake me,
Thoughts more kind will captive make me.
Oh, you silly, silly swain!
Better men than you remain.

Good King Wu

In the city of Haou he built his hall,
With circling waters round the wall:
From north to south, from east to west
There was never a tongue but called him blest.
Great King Wu was a monarch true.

With divination deep, I trow,
Afar he sought the sight of Haou.
With tortoise-shell the site he chose,
And tier by tier the city rose.
Great King Wu was a monarch true.

By the waters of Fung white millet grew.
Statesmen wise were the choice of Wu,
The future reaped whate'er he planned;
His son was lord of a grateful land.
Good King Wu was a monarch true.

Faint Heart

I pray you, dear,
 My little hamlet leave,
 Nor break my willow-boughs;
 'Tis not that I should grieve,
 But I fear my sire to rouse.
 Love pleads with passion disarrayed,—
 “A sire’s commands must be obeyed.”

I pray you, dear,
 Leap not across my wall,
 Nor break my mulberry-boughs;
 Not that I fear their fall,
 But, lest my brother’s wrath should rouse,
 Love pleads with passion disarrayed,—
 “A brother’s words must be obeyed.”

I pray you, dear,
 Steal not my garden down,
 Nor break my sandal-trees;
 Not that I care for these,
 But, oh! I dread the talk of town.
 Should lovers have their wilful way,
 Whatever would the neighbours say?

Without Her

The moon comes forth in her brightness;
Fair as the moon was she,
That bright and beautiful lady
Who lit the night for me.
Would that I saw her now,
With the stars around her brow.

The moon comes forth in her splendour;
Fair through the void she burns,
That pale and beautiful lady,
My moon, no more returns;
But under the alien skies
She shines in a stranger's eyes.

The moon comes forth in her glory;
Kind to the world is she.
That kind and beautiful lady,
Doth charm no night for me.
Oh, when the dawn-star wanes
For the sun to rend my chains!

The Forest Lover

Këen-Kwan the axles cried,
 As I drove to claim my bride.
 Hunger for her beauty presses,
 I am parched for her caresses;
 Though we lack good company,
 We shall revel—I and she.

Dense the forest in the plain,
 Where the long-tailed pheasants reign;
 Happy is the house that owns her,
 Where a lover's choice enthrones her.
 Pledge me while I praise you, dear!
 Love shall ever need you near.

Though I have but little wine,
 Love makes little cups divine.
 Though but one poor meal await us,
 Simple fare shall amply sate us;
 Though small worth is mine to bring,
 Gaily we will dance and sing.

Yon tall ridges I ascend
 And the stubborn firewood rend.
 When the riven oaks are ringing
 All my thoughts fly homeward winging;
 Though their green abysses hide,
 My whole heart is satisfied.

Yon dim mountains disappear,
 On the road the course is clear.
 Gathering hooves go loudly drumming,
 Reins like lute-strings join their thrumming;
 Till beside the open door,
 She is in my arms once more.

The Householder's Lament

The marshland holds the carambola tree;
Soft and pliant its branches be.
With its careless beauty and tender sheen,
The life of a tree is the life for me.

The marshland rears the carambola tree;
All purple and red its blossoms be.
In careless beauty and tender sheen,
Would I were childless and bland like thee.

The marshland loves the carambola tree;
Soft and sweet are the fruits I see.
Clothed with beauty and sunlit sheen,
The rateless and roofless life for me.

Unavailing

He stabs me with a scornful smile.

Winds are wailing at the door.

Scornful words and whispers vile,

Ye have thrust me to the core.

Whirling dust the northwind blows.

Surely he will seek his mate!

But he neither comes nor goes,

Through the long dumb hours that wait.

Blew the wind and veiled the sky;

One hour's gleam, then clouds again.

Sleep went trailing softly by,

Left me to the old dull pain.

Clouds across the darkness sweep,

Thunder rolls its monotone.

Who shall put my heart to sleep?

Heart that aches, and aches alone.

Grey Dawns And Red

Cold is the rain and cold the wind,
The cock gives dawn shrill greeting;
But a shadow steals across the blind,
And oh! my heart is beating.

The rain drives down, the wind tears past,
The cock shrills through the gloaming;
But love is in the house at last,
And sorrow flies his homing.

Though the world look dark through wind and rain,
And the dismal cock's a-crowing;
I'll sigh no more for the nights to wane,
And its oh! for the red dawn's glowing.

THE END

*****

I'm Julie, the woman who runs Global Grey - the website where this ebook was published. These are my own formatted editions, and I hope you enjoyed reading this particular one.

If you have this book because you bought it as part of a collection – thank you so much for your support.

If you downloaded it for free – please consider (if you haven't already) making a small donation to help keep the site running.

If you bought this from Amazon or anywhere else, you have been ripped off by someone taking free ebooks from my site and selling them as their own. You should definitely get a refund :/

Thanks for reading this and I hope you visit the site again - new books are added regularly so you'll always find something of interest :)