

The background is a painting of a rural landscape. The sky is filled with large, textured, white and grey clouds. In the middle ground, there is a row of lush green trees. To the left, a small building with a red roof and a spire is visible. In the foreground, a person is standing near a horse in a field. The overall style is impressionistic with visible brushstrokes.

Stockdale went in; and it is to be supposed that they came to an understanding; for a fortnight later there was a sale of Lizzy's furniture, and after that a wedding at a chapel in a neighbouring town.

He took her away from her old haunts to the home that he had made for himself in his native county, where she studied her duties as a minister's wife with praiseworthy assiduity. It is said that in after years she wrote an excellent tract called Render unto Caesar; or, The Repentant Villagers, in which her own experience was anonymously used as the introductory story. Stockdale got it printed, after making some corrections, and putting in a few powerful sentences of his own; and many hundreds of copies were distributed by the couple in the course of their married life.

April 1879.
