

A DEAR LITTLE GIRL AT SCHOOL

AMY ELLA BLANCHARD

Global Grey ebooks

A DEAR LITTLE GIRL AT SCHOOL

BY
AMY ELLA BLANCHARD

1910

A Dear Little Girl at School by Amy Ella Blanchard.

This edition was created and published by Global Grey

©GlobalGrey 2018

globalgreyebooks.com

CONTENTS

Chapter 1. Cousin Ben

Chapter 2. The Secret

Chapter 3. A Saturday Afternoon

Chapter 4. A Thanksgiving Dinner

Chapter 5. In a Blizzard

Chapter 6. Cousin Ben to the Rescue

Chapter 7. Disturbances

Chapter 8. The Friendless Friends

Chapter 9. The Puzzle

Chapter 10. A Downfall of Pride

Chapter 11. A New Member

Chapter 12. The Flower Play

Dorothy and Margaret walked down to the gate to watch the sunset, all yellow and glowing.

"Miss Newman looked almost pretty," said Dorothy. "She had such a dear frock on and her hair is much nicer the way she wore it to-day. I shall feel so very different about having her for a teacher next year."

"So shall I," agreed Edna.

Moggins, Margaret's cat had sought them out and was rubbing up against his little mistress. "Oh, you poor dear, I don't believe anyone has thought to give you your milk," said Margaret. So she went off with the cat in her arms.

Then "Where are you, Dorothy?" cried her sister, and Dorothy scampered off that she might not be left behind on the homeward walk.

Edna walked slowly toward the house. Halfway up the walk she met Uncle Justus. "I was just coming for you to walk home with me," he told her. "Your aunt and I are going to stay all night."

"I'm glad of that," Edna replied slipping her hand into his.

They walked on toward the road, quite silent for a few moments, till Edna looking up, said, "Uncle Justus, I think you have a perfectly lovely school."

He smiled down at her.

"I have some perfectly lovely pupils," he answered with a smile.

---