Chapter 7. Conclusion

The ordinary layman does not pronounce opinions on facts in physics, chemistry, or astronomy, because he has not studied these subjects. In regard to psychic phenomena, however, he is ready with his opinion. The same thing was observable in the latter half of the nineteenth century when many, otherwise intelligent people, condemned “Darwin and his Gospel of Dirt,” who had never read even the Origin of Species.

The man who says “I have perused the evidence but consider it inadequate for the following reasons . . .” is one with whom we can argue with mutual profit.

The man who says “These phenomena are contrary to the laws of nature, therefore, any evidence for them is unworthy of consideration” is beyond argument. He is as irrational as the ecclesiastics who opposed the Mosaic cosmology to the doctrine of Evolution. If this book may lead some readers to pass from the latter to the former class it will not have been written in vain.

A quick note: Hi! I'm Julie, the woman who runs Global Grey - the website where this ebook was published for free. These are my own editions, and I hope you enjoyed reading this particular one.

To support the site, and to allow me to continue offering these quality (and completely free) ebooks, please think about donating a small amount (if you already have - thank you!). It helps with the site costs, and any amount is appreciated.

Thanks for reading this and I really hope you visit Global Grey again - new books are added regularly so you'll always find something of interest :)
